Bright_Coffee

BIGHT COFFEE SHOP

Sales analysis Presentation

Bright_Coffee

ABOUT MY ANALYSIS

Bright Coffee Sales Analysis

The Bright Coffee sales analysis focuses on understanding customer purchasing behavior and overall business performance.

The analysis examines key trends such as the days of the week with the highest sales, identifying peak periods where customer demand is strongest. It also highlights the top-selling products, allowing the business to focus on high-demand items and optimize inventory.

The analysis reviews sales performance by location, helping to identify which stores or areas generate the most revenue. Customer spending patterns are also analyzed by grouping transactions into spending buckets (e.g., low, medium, and high spenders), enabling better targeting of high-value customers and improved marketing strategies.

The insights from this analysis support better decision-making, improved operational efficiency, and increased profitability.

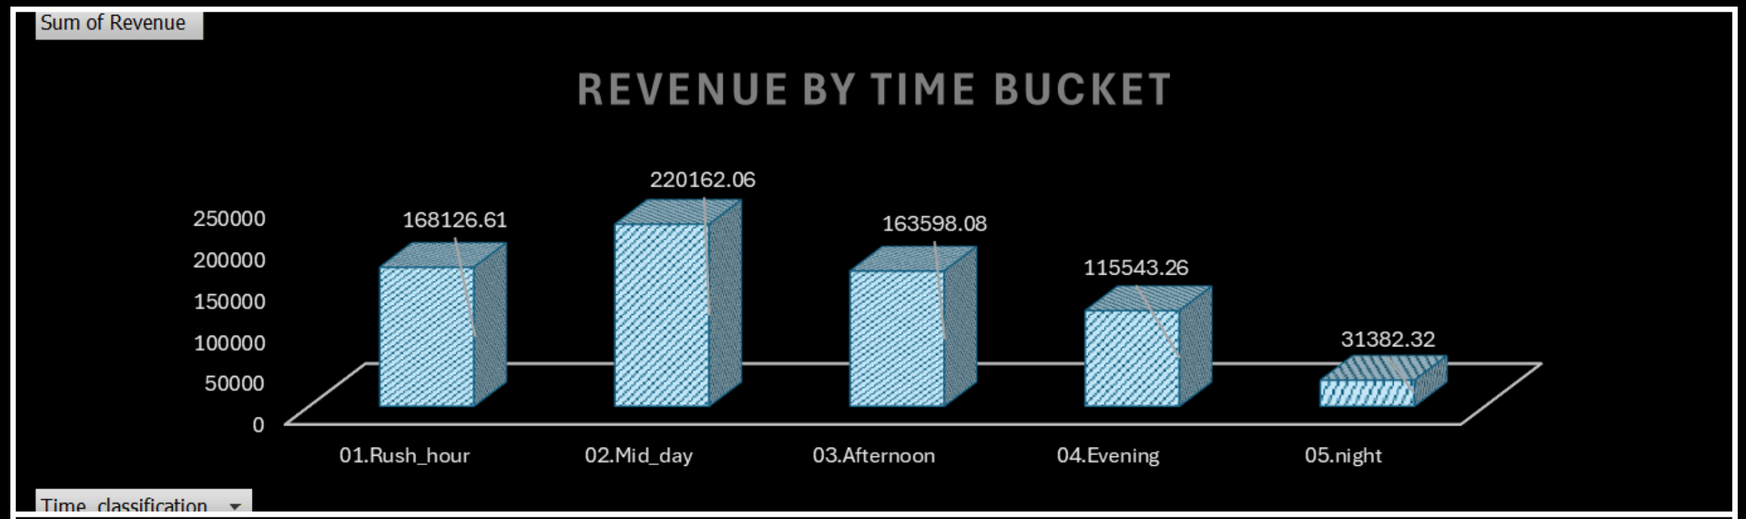
Bright_Coffee

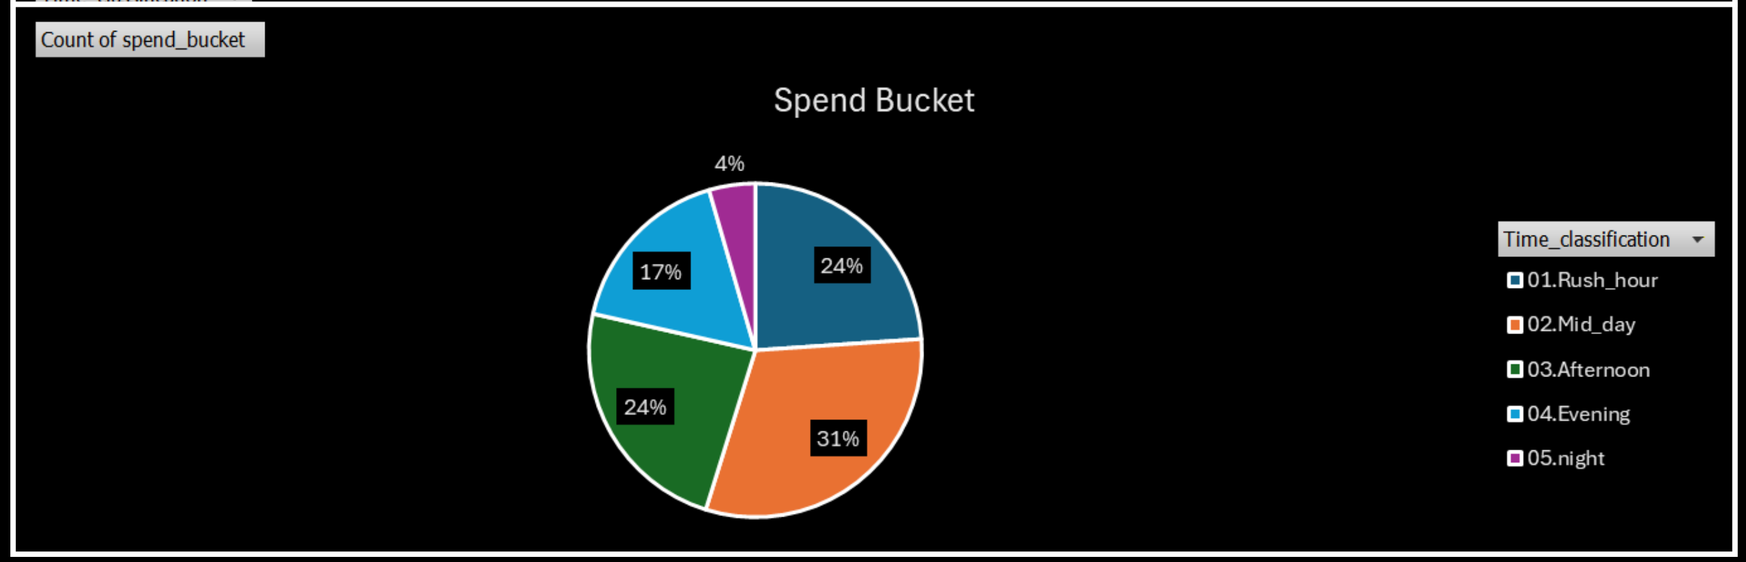
ANALISING SALES BY TIME BUCKET AND SPEND BUCKET

ForFor Bright Coffee, our revenue analysis shows a clear demand pattern: midday is our strongest trading period, with the highest coffee sales, followed by rush hour periods.

This tells us that customer activity peaks around lunchtime, with a second wave driven by commuters and customers looking for quick, convenient purchases.

From a business perspective, this highlights where we should prioritize staffing, speed of service, and product availability to fully capture revenue during these high-demand windows



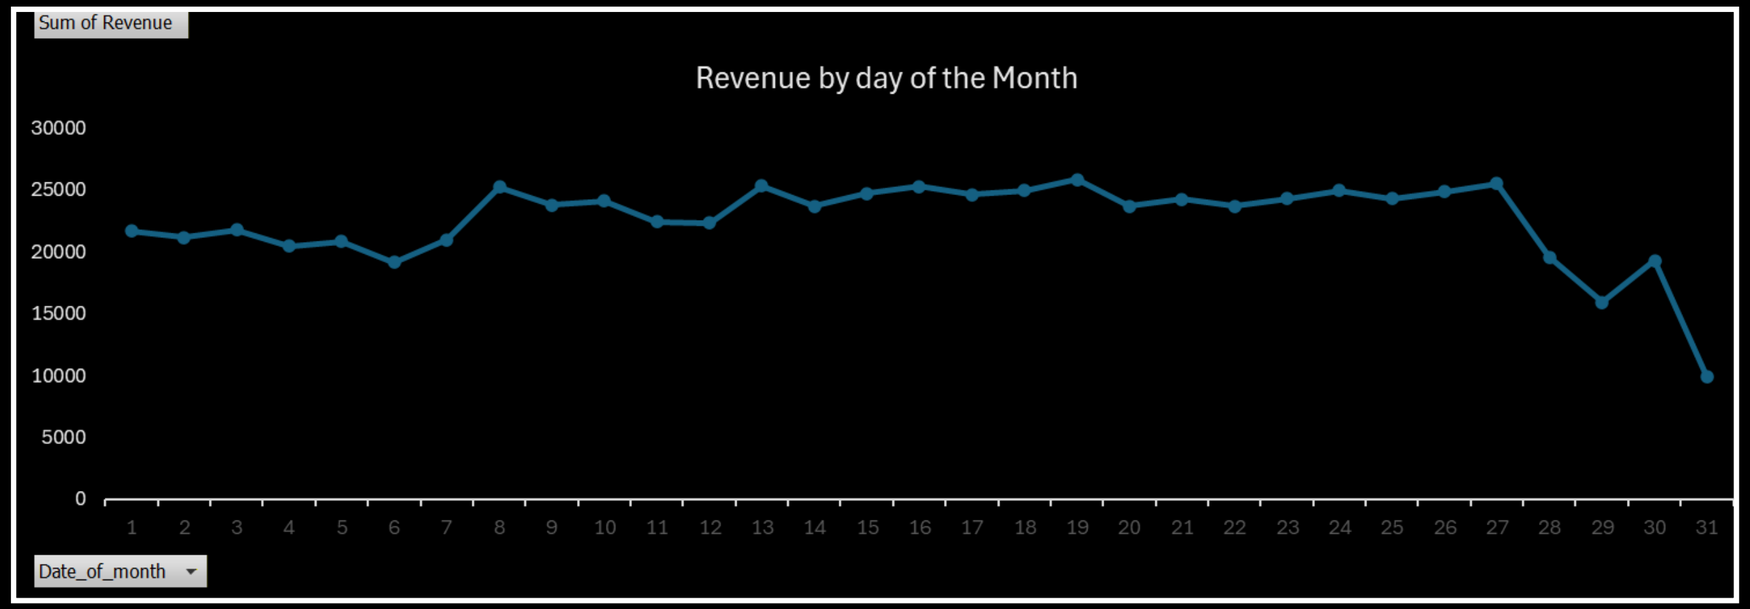


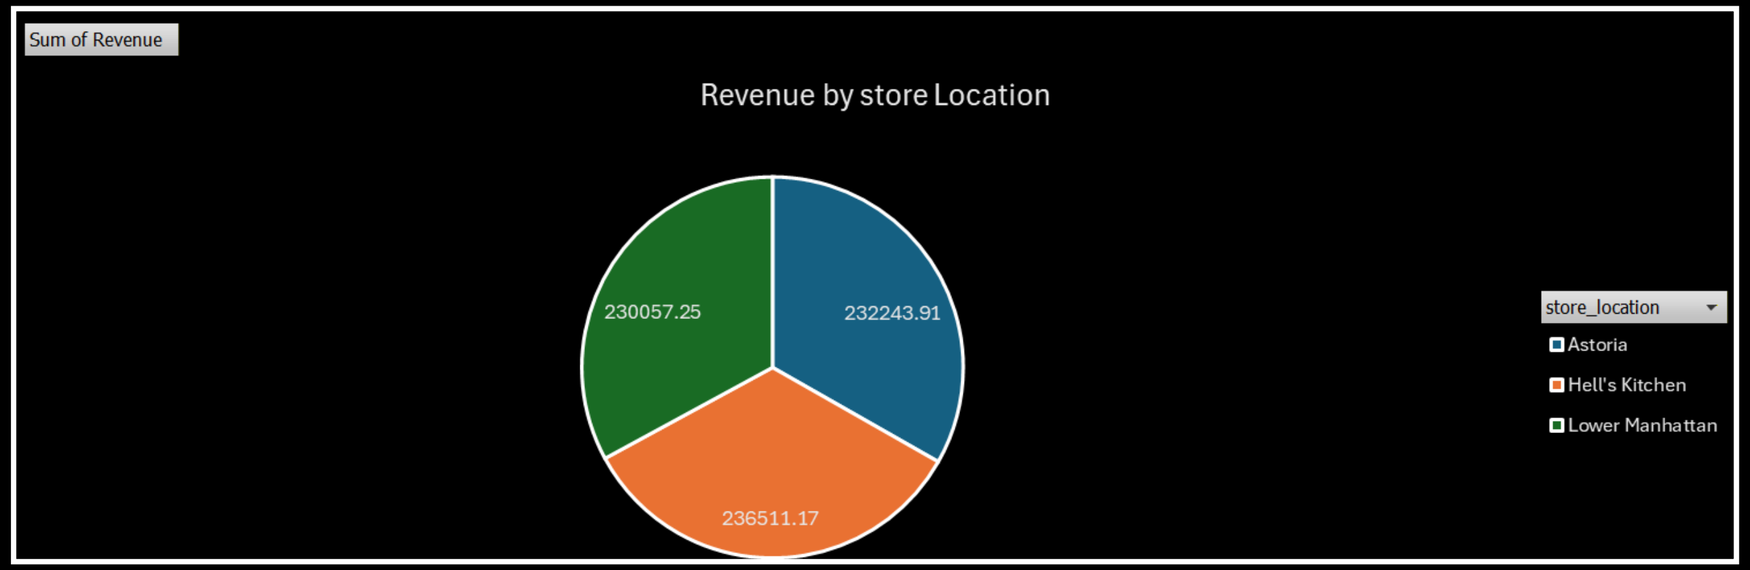
Bright_Coffee

ANALISING REVENUE BY DAY OF THE MONTH AND STORE LOCATION

At Bright Coffee, our analysis of revenue by day of the month and store location shows that the Hell's Kitchen branch consistently delivers the highest coffee sales, making it our top-performing location.

From a business perspective, this highlights Hell's Kitchen as a benchmark site—giving us an opportunity to understand what's driving its performance and replicate those success factors across other branches to lift overall revenue.





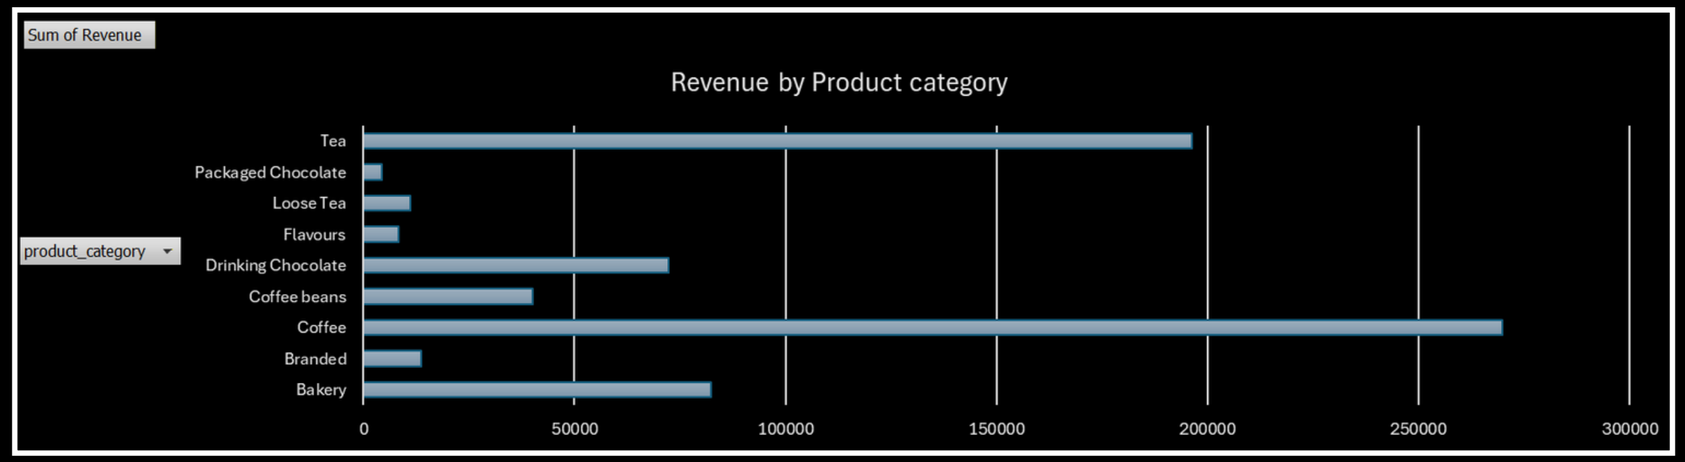
ANALISING REVENUE BY PRODUCT CATEGORY AND PRODUCT TYPE

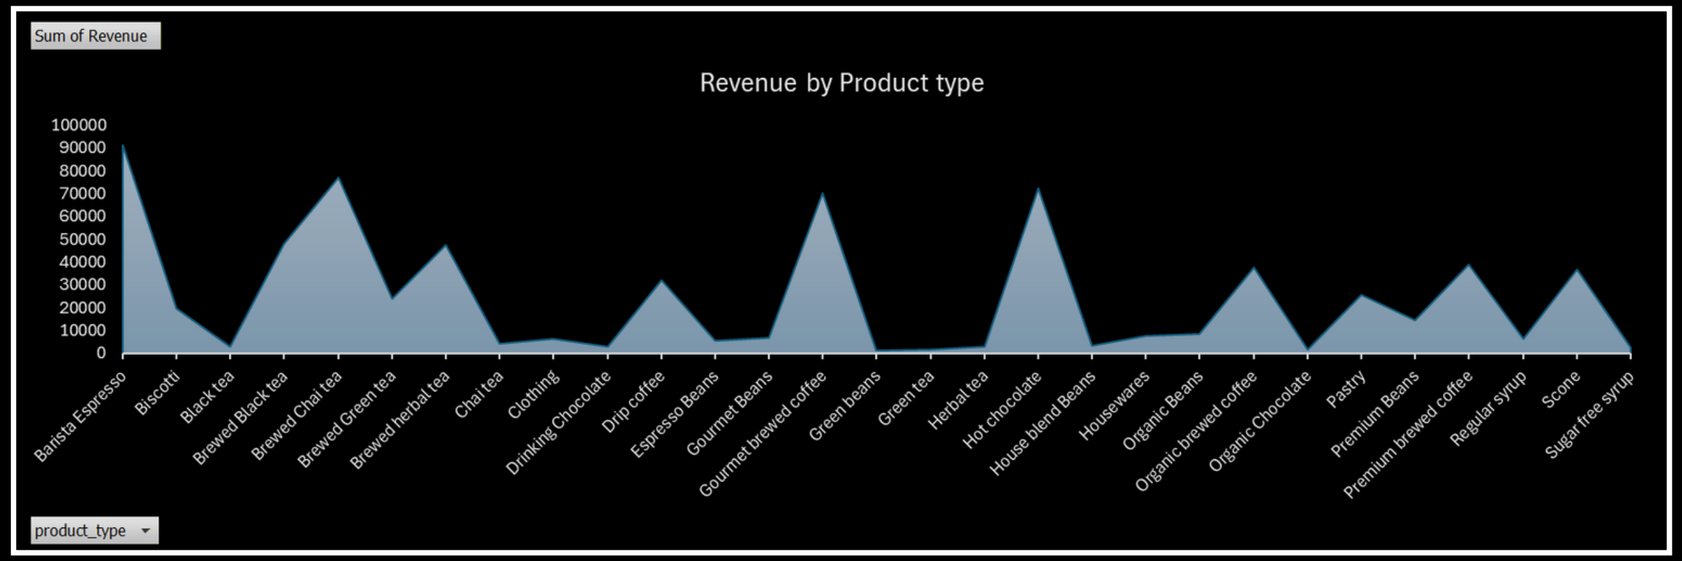
Bright_Coffee

At Bright Coffee, when we break down revenue by product category and product type, we clearly see that barista-made coffee is our biggest revenue driver.

This means most of our income is coming from freshly prepared, in-store coffee rather than other products like tea or retail items.

This insight confirms that our core strength is the barista experience, and it highlights an opportunity to further grow revenue by focusing on premium coffee offerings, speed of service, and customer experience around this category.



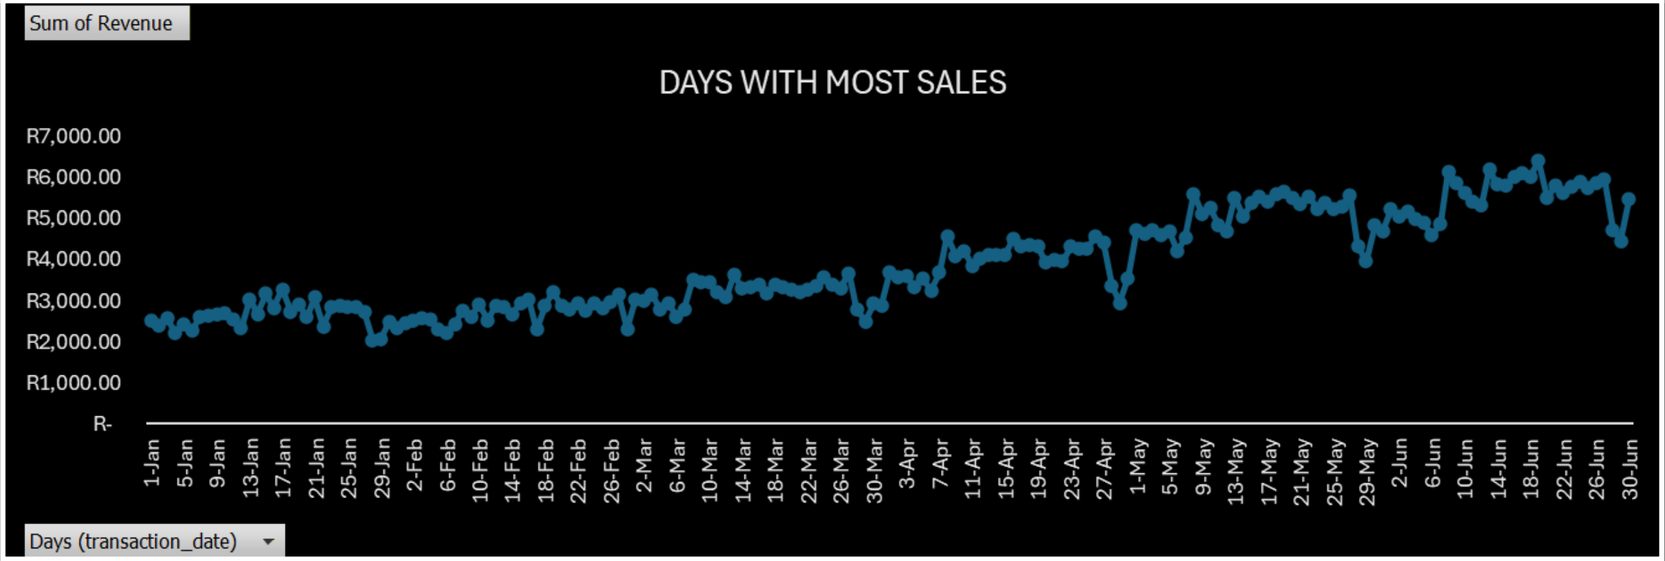


Bright_Coffee

ANALISING WHAT TIME OF THE DAY HAS MORE SALES AND WHICH DAYS OF THE MONTH

For Bright Coffee, our sales trend shows that the highest activity occurs during midday, with demand building up towards the latter part of the month.

This indicates that customers are most active around lunchtime and tend to spend more as the month progresses, highlighting key periods where we should focus on staffing, stock availability, and targeted promotions to maximize revenue.

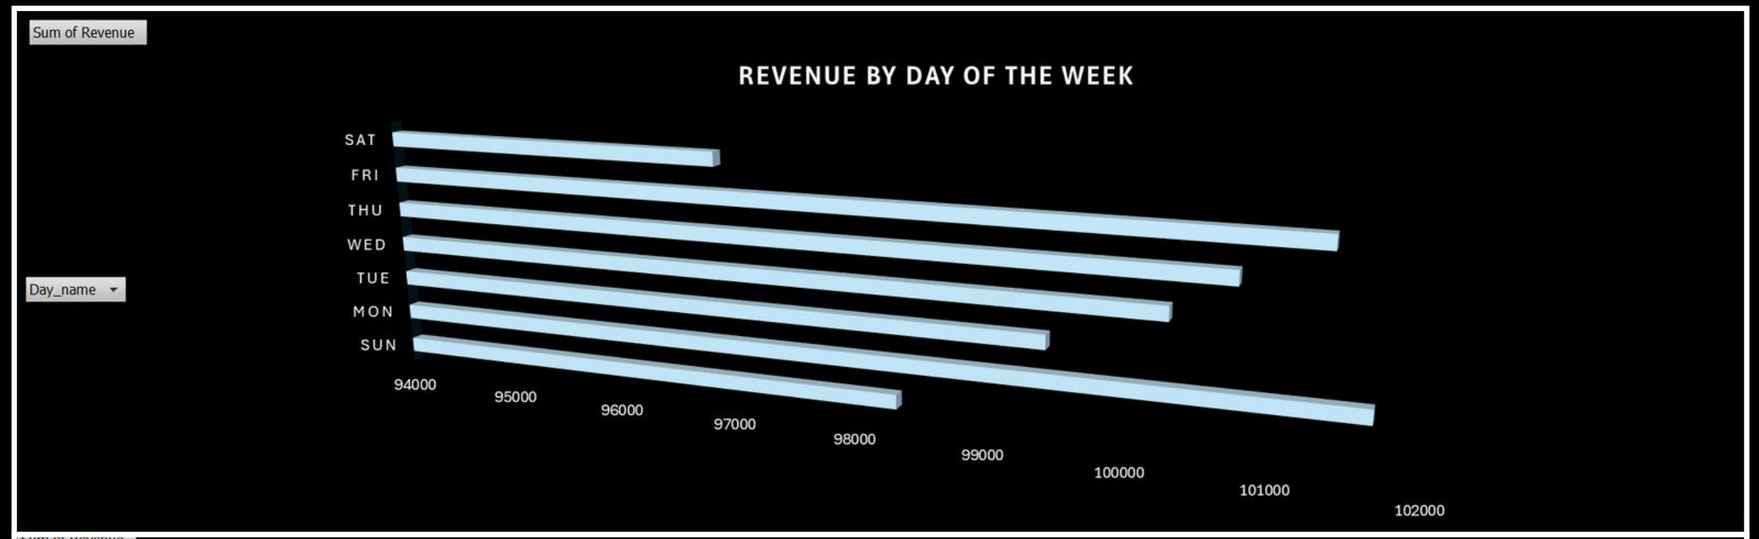


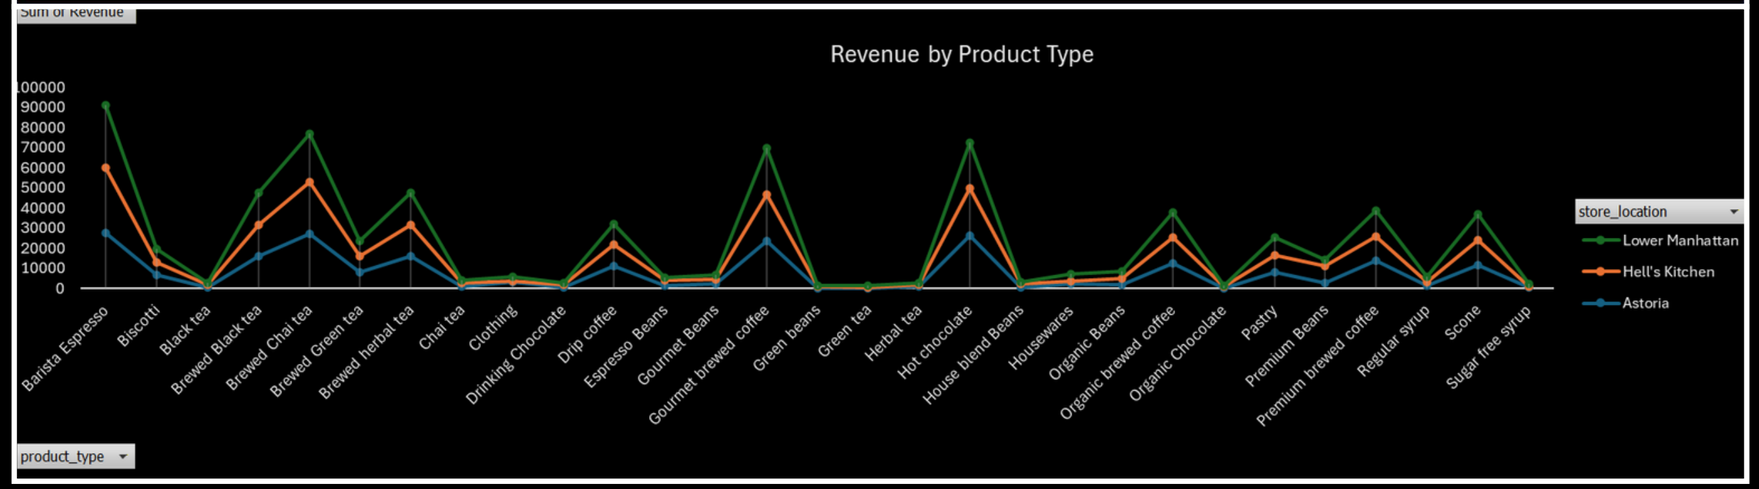
Bright_Coffee

ANALISING REVENUE BY DAY OF THE WEEK AND THE STORE LOCATION WITH MOST SALES

For Bright Coffee, our revenue analysis by day of the week and store location shows that Monday and Friday generate the highest barista coffee sales.

This suggests strong demand at the start and end of the workweek, giving us a clear opportunity to focus promotions, staffing, and service efficiency on these peak days to maximize revenue





ANALISING REVENUE BY STORE AND PRODUCT CATEGORY

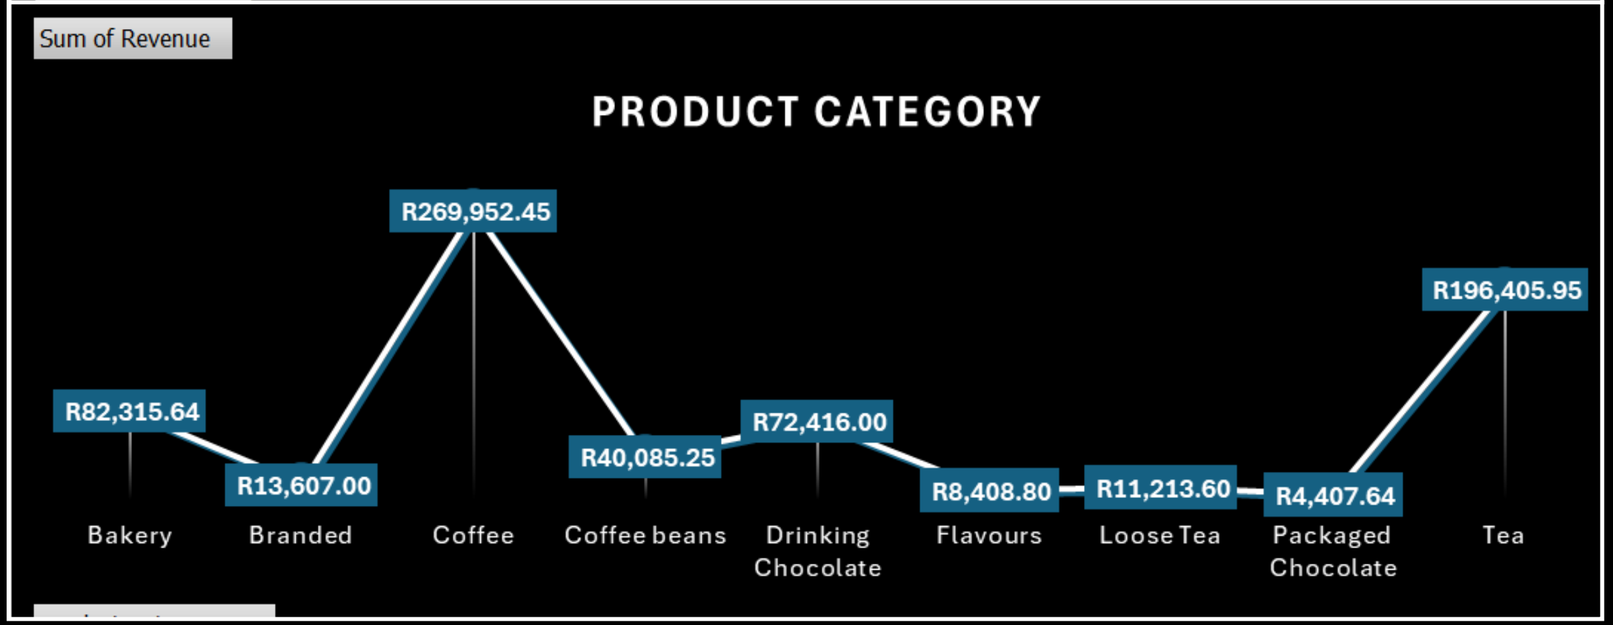
Bright_Coffee

Bright Coffee Sales Analysis

In conclusion, Bright Coffee's sales analysis highlights three key drivers of performance: the Hell's Kitchen branch as the top-performing location, coffee as the leading revenue-generating product, and stronger sales during weekdays.

These insights provide clear direction for the business—focus on replicating the success of the Hell's Kitchen store, continue to prioritize and enhance the barista coffee offering, and align staffing, stock, and operations with weekday demand patterns.

By acting on these findings, Bright Coffee can improve efficiency, strengthen customer experience, and drive overall revenue growth.



Bright_Coffee

THANK YOU

Compiled by:
Lastana Musekwa
Business Coach